This project captures ethnographic interviews of the state's oldest old residents to provide a window to Michigan's rich cultural history and to gain an understanding of older adults' thoughts on their longevity, resilience, and quality of life. Oldest old is the term used to describe individuals 85 years of age and older who globally represent the fastest-growing age cohort. These individuals share stories that span a century. This project is a multi-generational experience where the oldest members of society will be better understood in relation to their contributions to the world.
